The big impact of a little word:
I in Shakespeare and beyond

Jonathan Culpeper, Lancaster University, UK
Point of departure ...

• I is typically omitted from Shakespearean dictionaries (e.g. Crystal and Crystal 2002; Onions 1986), presumably on the assumption that:

  (a) their meanings are obvious (because they are considered more or less the same as those of today), and

  (b) they do not contribute much to understanding Shakespeare.
How was the 1st person singular pronoun said?

Shakespeare’s was writing roughly half-way through the Great Vowel Shift.

i: > \varepsilon > \alpha

(cf. Crystal 2016)

But of course the older pronunciation was available as well (as today)
How was the 1st person singular pronoun written?

• Always “I”
• But the 1st person pronoun did not have a monopoly: it competed with the affirmative “Aye”, e.g.

Ros. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeyted to sound, when he shew 'd me your handkercher?
Orl. I, and greater wonders then that. (AYL)

In the First Folio (1623), there are at least 302 instances of I (= Aye) out of 20,293 instances of I (1st pers. pronoun), i.e. about 1.5% of I.
Exploiting the ambiguity for light humour

[Speed and Protheus in Shakespeare’s Two Gentlemen of Verona, act 1, scene I, First Folio 1623]

_Pro._ But what said she?
_Sp._ I.
_Pro._ Nod-I, why that's noddy.
_Sp._ You mistooke Sir: I say she did nod;
And you aske me if she did nod, and I say I.
_Pro._ And that set together is noddy.
A further homophone: I and eye

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I eyed,
Such seems your beauty still. (Sonnet 104)

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye
And all my soul and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
(Sonnet 62)

Three word expressions in present-day plays

- In the Present-day Play-texts one can discern many fragments of questions; there is only one question fragment in the Early Modern data: WHAT DO YOU.

- Present-day questions orientate to beliefs, thoughts, wants and feelings. Note the high frequency of private verbs (know, want, think).

- Present-day Play-texts deploy the adjacency pair question as a central mechanism in not only creating the interaction but indirectly revealing information for the audience.

Frank: What I want to know is what is it that’s suddenly led you to this?

Rita: What? Comin’ here?

Frank: Yes.

Rita: It’s not sudden.

Frank: Ah.

Rita: I’ve been realizin’ for ages that I was, y’ know, slightly out of step. I’m twenty-six. I should have had a baby by now; everyone expects it. I’m sure me husband thinks I’m sterile. [...]

The Theatre (1576),
The Curtain (1577),
The Rose (1587),
The Swan (1595),
The Globe (1599), and
The Fortune (1600).
A trend in the Early Modern data is for the lexical bundle to begin with a first person pronoun.

Especially notable trend for Shakespeare, where it combines with verbs relating to states, desires and knowledge. I pray you is most distinctive.

Perhaps reflects a tendency for characters to present themselves (and others) relatively directly (including via soliloquies and asides).
